Overview

Rape Shield Statutes are a legislative attempt to protect victims in rape cases from intrusive inquiries by the exclusion of evidence which might reflect on the character of the witness without a material contribution to the issue of the guilt or innocence of the accused. The statute in Georgia (O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3) prohibits evidence relating to the victim's past sexual behavior, including marital history, mode of dress, general reputation for promiscuity, or sexual mores contrary to community standards. The rape shield statute supersedes all evidentiary exceptions. Past sexual behavior of an alleged rape victim will be prohibited unless the court finds that the behavior directly involved the participation of the defendant and supports an inference that the the defendant could have reasonably believed that the victim consented to the conduct at issue.

Scope

This research guide presents an overview of the Georgia Rape Shield Statute. Specifically, the guide provides the applicable statutes, case law, and secondary sources demonstrating how the legislation is applied to assist attorneys with little or no familiarity with the protections provided to victims under the statute. The guide is also designed to provide a resource to victims of sexual assault and their families in Georgia including Internet resources that identify organizations that provide assistance to victims.

Disclaimer

This guide is a starting point for a law student, attorney, or victim to research the Rape Shield laws in Georgia. This guide should not be considered as legal advice or as a legal opinion on any specific facts or circumstances. If you need legal advice, please contact an attorney. If you need further assistance in researching this topic, please contact a reference librarian in the Georgia State University College of Law library.

Evidence

O.C.G.A §24-2-3 (2011)

Matters Not Relevant to the Prosecution of Rape

- A victim's past sexual behavior is not admissible in prosecutions for certain sex offenses.
  - Includes sexual offenses related to rape, aggravated sodomy, aggravated child molestation, and aggravated sexual battery
- For purposes of the code, past sexual behavior includes: marital history, mode of dress, general reputation for promiscuity, nonchastity, or sexual mores contrary to the community standards.
- Exception:
  - Past sexual behavior may be introduced if the court finds that the past sexual behavior directly involved the participation of the accused and finds that the evidence expected to be introduced supports an inference that the accused could have reasonably believed that the complaining witness consented to the conduct complained of in the prosecution.
- Procedure for introducing evidence of past sexual behavior:
  - The defense shall notify the court of intent to introduce evidence, whereupon the court will conduct an in camera hearing to examine the defendant's offer of proof. If, at the conclusion of the hearing, the court finds that any of the evidence introduced at the hearing directly involves the participation of the accused and evidence supports the inference that the accused could have reasonably believed their was consent or is so highly material that it will substantially support a conclusion that the accused reasonably believed that the complaining witness consented to the conduct, the court shall by order state what evidence may be introduced at trial and what manner the evidence may be introduced.

Sexual Assault Services Program

Ga. Comp. R. & Regs. r. 144-5-.08 (2010)

The Sexual Assault Services Program was created by the Violence Against Women and Department of Justice Reauthorization Act of 2005 (VAWA 2005), 42 U.S.C. § 14043g, and is solely dedicated to the provision of direct intervention and related assistance for victims of sexual assault.

The purpose of the program is to provide intervention, advocacy, accompaniment (e.g., accompanying victims to court, medical facilities, police departments, etc.), support services, and related assistance for adult, youth, and child victims of sexual assault, family and household members of victims, and those collaterally affected by the sexual assault.

To receive information regarding making an application for these funds, contact the Criminal Justice Coordinating Council (grants.infor@cjcc.ga.gov).

U.S. Supreme Court Cases

Michigan v. Lucas, 500 U.S. 145, 111 S. Ct. 1743 (1991)

The exclusion of evidence of the defendant's sexual relationship with a rape victim was not per se unconstitutional because preclusion could have been an appropriate sanction for failure to comply with the notice provisions of the Rape Shield Statute.

Court of Appeals of Georgia

Robinson v. State, A10A1968, 2011 WL 923975 (Ga. Ct. App. Mar. 18, 2011)

The trial court erred by striking the testimony regarding the victim's previous alleged sexual conduct with her brother based on its conclusion that the rape shield statute applied to child molestation and sexual battery. The court distinguishes between the charges of sexual battery and aggravated sexual battery and child molestation and aggravated child molestation because only aggravated sexual battery and aggravated child molestation are included in the statute. The case has been remanded for a new trial. The opinion also provides a history of the statute prior to the 2005 amendments.

Birdsong v. State, 298 Ga. App. 322, 680 S.E.2d 159 (2009)

The court found that the trial court did not err in denying defendant's plea in bar of former jeopardy with regard to kidnapping, rape, and other charges for alleged crimes committed against his estranged wife as his counsel violated the Rape Shield Statute in their questioning of the wife. The State was entitled to a mistrial. The court also found that because the purpose of statute is to protect the victim from evidence which might reflect on her character without contributing materially to the issue of guilt or innocence, there appears no meaningful distinction between sexual behavior before and after the crime, so evidence subject to exclusion includes evidence of any sexual behavior by the victim before trial.

Osterhout v. State, 266 Ga. App. 319, 596 S.E.2d 766 (2004)

The defendant was charged with the aggravated assault of his wife in conjunction with a rape charge. The Georgia Court of Appeals found that the trial court properly excluded evidence of the sexual history of the defendant's wife pursuant to the Rape Shield Statute.

Shields v. State, 264 Ga. App. 232, 590 S.E.2d 217 (2003)

Defendant appealed dismissal of his motion for a mistrial. The Court of Appeals found that the trial court did not abuse its discretion by finding that the State did not act in bad faith by not providing the defendant with the victim's complete current address.

Williams v. State, 263 Ga. App. 597, 588 S.E.2d 790 (2003)

Evidence that a child rape victim had sex with her boyfriend prior to the alleged rape was properly excluded where it was insufficiently probative because of the time frame even though it is relevant to show that the victim's pregnancy was not caused by the defendant. Including such evidence would only lead to the inference that the victim was engaging in sexual intercourse with others, reflecting on character without contributing materially to the issue of the defendant's guilt or innocence.

Williams v. State, 251 Ga. App. 137, 553 S.E.2d 823 (2001)

Evidence of the victim's prior rape was not found to be relevant and was not admissible pursuant to the Rape Shield Statute because the evidence cannot be used to show the victim's reputation for nonchastity or confusion of the victim. Therefore, the trial court did not abuse its discretion prohibiting the evidence.

Hicks v. State, 222 Ga. App. 828, 476 S.E.2d 101 (1996)

The court found that incidents that did not involve the defendant and did not support a defense of implied consent are protected by the Rape Shield Statute. Here, evidence of the defendant's conversation with his rape victim regarding her prior sexual abuse was properly excluded.

Veal v. State, 191 Ga. App. 445, 382 S.E.2d 131 (1989)

The court of appeals affirmed the conviction of rape, aggravated sodomy and aggravated assault. The court held that the Georgia Rape Shield Statute protected the rape victim, not the accused, from admission of evidence which might have reflected on the character of the witness without contributing materially to the issue of the guilt or innocence of the accused and that defendant's constitutional rights were not violated when the Rape Shield Statute was invoked.

Griffin v. State, 224 Ga. App. 225, 480 S.E.2d 608 (1987)

The Rape Shield Statute prohibited testimony about a rape victim's past sexual conduct because it did not relate to the defendant and it did not support an inference that the defendant could have reasonably assumed that the victim consented to his conduct.

Supreme Court of Georgia

Richardson v. State, 276 Ga. 639, 581 S.E.2d 528 (2003)

The cross-examination of a rape victim regarding the non-sexual nature of her relationship with a former boyfriend was not excludable under the Rape Shield Statute. Also, the defendant's right of confrontation required that he was able to see the witnesses as they testified.

Smith v. State, 259 Ga. 135, 377 S.E.2d 158 (1989)

Georgia's Rape Shield Law did not bar the admission of testimony to attach the credibility of the victim and as substantive evidence regarding the victim's alleged prior false accusations.

Harris v. State, 257 Ga. 666, 362 S.E.2d 211 (1987)

The court found that the state's interest in the Rape Shield Statute supersedes a criminal defendant's right to confront and cross-examine a witness concerning the victim's past sexual behavior.

Villafranco v. State, 252 Ga. 188, 313 S.E.2d 469 (1984)

The trial court excluded a statement made by the victim prior to the alleged rape. The Supreme Court of Georgia found that the trial court made a reversible error by excluding the admissible statement as evidence of the victim's state of mind and not protected by Georgia's Rape Shield Statute.

Law Journal Articles

Thomas A. Mitchell, We're Only Fooling Ourselves: A Critical Analysis of the Biases Inherent in the Legal System's Treatment of Rape Victims: (Or Learning from our Mistakes: Abandoning a Fundamentally Prejudiced System & Moving Toward a Rational Jurisprudence of Rape), 18, Buff. Women's L. J. 73 (2010)

This article discusses the changes that have taken place in the American legal system with the intention to protect victims of rape. Whether actual progress has been made is questioned. Both sides of the issue, the reformers and defendant's rights advocates, are examined.

Antonia S. Lee, Rape, Sexual Assault & Evidentiary Matters, 8 Geo. J. Gender & L. 371 (2007)

This article discusses the various approaches different states take in determining what evidence in a victim's history are subject to judicial discretion. Because of this discretion, it is argued that the statutes may have consequences that may not be congruent with the original intent.

John McDonough, Consent v. Credibility: The Complications of Evidentiary Purpose Rape Shield Statutes, 5 Law & Soc'y J. UCSB 11 (2005)

This article discusses the development of rape shield statutes in different states and investigates whether the statutes actually exclude evidence of a victim's sexual past. The article questions whether the statutes are achieving their objective.

Andrea A. Curcio, The Georgia Roundtable Discussion Model: Another Way to Approach Reforming Rape Laws, 20 Ga. St. U. L. 565 (2004)

This article gives an overview of the issues facing the criminal justice system when dealing with sexual violence and addresses how groups of reformers can improve their handling and processing of sexual assault cases. Although the article was written prior to the statutory amendments of 2005, there is useful information regarding the use of the Georgia Supreme Court Commission on Equality roundtable discussion to create solutions to sexual violence.
