AUTHOR BIOGRAPHIES

Noor Abbady

Noor Abbady is a professor in the Language Studio at the Savannah College of Arts and Design - Atlanta and an Arabic instructor at the World Languages and Cultures Department at Georgia State University. She earned her M.A. degree in Applied Linguistics from Georgia State University. She has worked on research projects providing linguistic analysis for legal texts at the Georgia State College of Law and presented in conferences and workshops advocating for meaningful collaboration between legal and linguistic scholars. She is the cofounder of the Interfaith Speakers Network of Atlanta and was named the Speaker of the Year for 2013.

Diana Coetzee

Diana Coetzee is Professor of English in the ON Language Program at Brenau University and also teaches Legal English in the LL.M. for foreign lawyers program at the Georgia State University College of Law where she is responsible for designing and implementing a corpus-based curriculum that prepares foreign trained lawyers to sit for the Georgia bar examination. Previously, she taught English as a Second Language in Thailand, Turkey, and Slovakia; she also taught Social Problems and spearheaded the implementation of a campus-wide, interdisciplinary service-learning program at Tillamook Bay Community College in Oregon. She received an M.A. in Applied Linguistics from Georgia State University.

Clark D. Cunningham

Clark D. Cunningham is a Professor of Law and the W. Lee Burge Chair in Law & Ethics at the Georgia State University College of Law. He received the Association of American Law Schools (AALS) annual scholarly paper award for his application of linguistic theory to interpreting the meaning of “search” in the Fourth Amendment. His 1994 Yale Law Journal article Plain Meaning and Hard Cases, coauthored with three academic linguists, applied linguistics to analyze the meaning of statutory provisions that were the subject of three United States Supreme Court decisions that year. The article and its analysis were cited in the majority opinion in one of these cases and in a concurring opinion in another. In a law review essay published the following year, Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg singled out the Yale article as an example of legal scholarship that was “accessible and useful to judges.” His other collaborations with academic linguists include Using Common Sense: A Linguistic Perspective on Judicial Interpretations of ‘Use a Firearm,’ 73 Wash. U. L.Q. 1159 (1995) (with Charles J. Fillmore) and two coauthored articles in this issue. His amicus brief on the meaning of emoluments, coauthored with Jesse Egbert, in In re Trump (4th Circuit 2019) has been widely discussed in the media and cited by the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit as the work of “qualified experts.” He teaches a research seminar at Georgia State University on applying linguistic and historical analysis to research the original public meaning of the Constitution and Bill of Rights. He is the 2020 chair of the AALS Section on Law and Interpretation.

Jesse Egbert

Jesse Egbert is Associate Professor of Applied Linguistics at Northern Arizona University (NAU), where he received a Ph.D. in Applied Linguistics. Prior to joining the faculty at NAU, he was an Assistant Professor in the Linguistics Department at Brigham Young University. He specializes in register variation, particularly in academic and online writing, and also explores issues related to quantitative linguistic research, including corpus design and representativeness, methodological triangulation, and the application of advanced statistical techniques to language data. He is General Editor of the international peer reviewed journal Register Studies. He has authored or edited three books: Triangulating Methodological Approaches in Corpus Linguistic Research (Routledge, 2016), Register Variation Online (Cambridge, 2018), and Using Corpus Methods to Triangulate Linguistic Analysis (Routledge, 2019). He has published more than sixty papers in journals such as: Language Variation and Change, Corpus Linguistics and Linguistic Theory, Journal of English Linguistics, Journal of the Association for Information Science and Technology, Journal of Applied Statistics, and International Journal of Corpus Linguistics. He has been an active researcher in the area of statutory interpretation, with related publications in the BYU Law Review and The Routledge Handbook of Corpus Approaches to Discourse Analysis.

Tammy Gales

Tammy Gales is an Associate Professor of Linguistics and the Director of Research at the Institute for Forensic Linguistics, Threat Assessment, and Strategic Analysis at Hofstra University, New York. She currently serves on the Executive Committee for the International Association of Forensic Linguists. She received her Ph.D. in Linguistics from the University of California, Davis, and performed her dissertation research on threatening communications with the Academy Group, the world's largest private behavioral analysis firm of retired Supervisory Special Agents from the FBI. Her research interests cross the boundaries of language and the law and forensic linguistics. Within language and the law, she applies corpus linguistic methods to the interpretation of meaning in legal statutes and to disputed meanings in trademark cases. Within forensic linguistics, she applies corpus and discourse analytic methods to the examination of authorial stance in threatening communications as well as to other contexts such as the cross-examination of victims of sexual assault and parole board hearings in which certain populations are disproportionately denied parole. She has trained law enforcement officers from agencies across Canada and the U.S., and she has worked on criminal and civil cases for both the prosecution and defense.

Heather Kuhn

Heather Kuhn is a Security and Privacy Consultant at Cox Communications where she reviews technology projects for security and privacy risks including cloud, SaaS, and on-prem solutions. She is licensed to practice law in Georgia. She is on the Executive Committee for the Privacy and Technology Section of the State Bar of Georgia and on the International Association of Privacy Professionals' KnowledgeNet committee in Atlanta for 2020. She graduated from the Georgia State University College of Law where she graduated magna cum laude; she is a member of the Order of the Coif. Prior to law school, she had ten years of professional experience in government and both the nonprofit and for-profit sectors.

Eleanor Miller

Eleanor Miller graduated from the Georgia State University College of Law magna cum laude where she served as Research Editor of the Georgia State University Law Review and on the Moot Court Board. Upon graduation from law school, she joined the United States Department of the Treasury as an honors attorney in the Internal Revenue Service Office of Chief Counsel. Her practice includes representing the Treasury in federal sector employment cases before the U.S. Merit Systems Protection Board and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, as well as advising her government client on an array of labor and employment matters. She is a member of the State Bar of Virginia.

Heather Obelgoner

Heather Obelgoner has served as a law clerk for Justice Robert Benham of the Supreme Court of Georgia and for Justice Charles J. Bethel, also of the Supreme Court of Georgia. She graduated magna cum laude from the Georgia State University College of Law where she served as an Associate Editor of the Georgia State University Law Review.

Haoshan (Sally) Ren

Haoshan (Sally) Ren is a Ph.D. student in the Department of Applied Linguistics and English as a Second Language at Georgia State University. She worked as a language specialist at Penn State Law and with the LL.M. program for foreign-trained lawyers at the Georgia State University College of Law. Her research interests include corpus linguistics, language assessment, and sociolinguistics, using both qualitative and quantitative methods. In line with these interests, her work focuses on phraseological analysis of language using specialized corpora and the intersection of language use, language assessment, and language attitudes. Serving as the copresident of the Graduate Student Association of the Department of Applied Linguistics and as the department's graduate student representative to the College of Arts and Sciences, she has been active in initiating and participating in interdisciplinary and cross-institutional collaborations. She is also a member of the Graduate Student Council Steering Committee of the American Association for Applied Linguistics.

Ute Römer

Ute Römer is an Associate Professor in the Department of Applied Linguistics and English as a Second Language at Georgia State University. From 2007 to 2011, she was director of the Applied Corpus Linguistics unit at the University of Michigan English Language Institute where she managed the Michigan Corpus of Academic Spoken English (MICASE) and the Michigan Corpus of Upper-level Student Papers (MICUSP) projects. Her research interests include phraseology, second language acquisition, academic discourse analysis, and the application of corpora in language learning and teaching. She serves on a range of editorial and advisory boards of professional journals (e.g., Corpora, International Journal of Corpus Linguistics, English Text Construction) and professional organizations (e.g., International Computer Archive of Modern and Medieval English (ICAME); American Association for Corpus Linguistics, (AACL)). She is also General Editor of the book series Studies in Corpus Linguistics (John Benjamins). Her research has been published in a range of applied, corpus, and cognitive linguistics journals including Language Learning, Modern Language Journal, Annual Review of Applied Linguistics, International Journal of Corpus Linguistics, Corpora, Corpus Linguistics and Linguistic Theory, and Cognitive Linguistics.

Lawrence M. Solan

Lawrence M. Solan is the Don Forchelli Professor of Law; Director of the Center for the Study of Law, Language and Cognition; and Director of Graduate Education at Brooklyn Law School. He holds a Ph.D. in Linguistics from the University of Massachusetts and a J.D. from Harvard Law School. Much of his writing is about the interpretation of statutes and contracts. His books include The Language of Judges, Speaking of Crime (with Peter Tiersma), and The Language of Statutes: Laws and Their Interpretation, all published by the University of Chicago Press. He and Peter Tiersma coedited The Oxford Handbook of Language and Law (2012), and he coedited with Janet Ainsworth and Roger Shuy the 2015 volume, Speaking of Language and Law: Conversations on the Work of Peter Tiersma, also published by Oxford. He has been a visiting professor at the Yale Law School and in the Psychology Department and Humanities Council at Princeton University. Following law school, he clerked for Justice Stewart Pollock of the Supreme Court of New Jersey. Prior to joining the Brooklyn Law School faculty in 1996, he was an attorney at a New York litigation law firm.

Abigail Stout

Abigail Stout currently serves as a law clerk for the Supreme Court of Georgia. She received her J.D., summa cum laude, from Georgia State University College of Law, graduating Order of the Coif and as a Dean's Scholar. During law school, she served as a Legislation Editor of the Georgia State University Law Review and won the title of National Champion at the 2019 Wagner Employment Law Moot Court competition.

Margaret Wood

Margaret Wood is a Ph.D. student in the Applied Linguistics program at Northern Arizona University. She received her master's degree in Teaching English as a Second Language at Northern Arizona University in 2018 and went on to serve as a Fulbright Scholar in Lao People's Democratic Republic for the 2018–2019 academic year. Her current research interests include forensic authorship and psycholinguistics, and she has presented original research in many other subfields of applied linguistics, including corpus linguistics, phonology, and assessment. Her research focus is on the intersection of corpus linguistics and statutory interpretation, and her current work concerns the application of corpus linguistic methods to examine linguistic interpretations presented in canons of statutory construction.
