As part of a year-long strategic planning process, which focused on new initiatives at the College of Law, several faculty members developed formal proposals that led to the creation of two new law centers. On April 7, 2004, the university approved the establishment of the Center for Law, Health & Society and the Center for the Comparative Study of Metropolitan Growth at the College of Law.

The Center for Law, Health & Society initiated by Professor Charity Scott seeks to provide national leadership in the integration of law and ethics into health policy, health research and the provision of health services. The center will promote interdisciplinary collaboration among faculty, scholars, students, professionals and practitioners from multi-disciplinary backgrounds through research, education and community service.

Further, the Center for Law, Health & Society provides an interdisciplinary forum for addressing contemporary issues involving health justice, the provision of health care, health care enterprises, and the health and welfare of individuals, families, and communities. The center is the first such health-related law school center in Georgia.

The Center for the Comparative Study of Metropolitan Growth, led by Professor Colin Crawford, will become a venue for research, teaching and academic exchange on a range of issues relating to metropolitan growth. The center will produce comparative research focusing on the legal, regulatory, policy, planning, financial, social and political challenges facing Atlanta and other cities as they confront the host of issues that urban and regional growth impose on the environment.

The center will draw attention to Georgia State University’s current and ongoing scholarship in matters related to growth and also expand the university’s profile as an urban research institution in the Atlanta region and throughout Georgia. The center’s first programs include a university-wide “Urban Fellows” program, in which top graduate students from law and other colleges will meet with prominent law and policymakers to discuss issues related to metropolitan growth and...
Dean’s Message

The College of Law enjoys an outstanding reputation in our region for its high-quality legal education. Faculty members take teaching seriously. As a result, our graduates enter the legal profession well prepared to tackle its challenges. The college now finds itself well positioned to move to its next phase of development: recognition as one of the nation’s leading publicly assisted law schools.

The law school’s continuing rise to national prominence will be determined by its ability to become a national leader in some specialized areas of legal study. In the last few years, the faculty has approved more specialized curricular offerings in growth management and land use law, health law, and intellectual property law. The university’s recent approval of two centers at the law school further accelerates the college’s ability to distinguish itself.

The newly created Center for the Comparative Study of Growth Management envisions Georgia State as a major global resource for interdisciplinary research related to the law and regulation of metropolitan growth and its environmental impact. It will serve as a forum for research, education, and community service. Taking advantage of the law school’s existing linkages with Georgia’s state government and General Assembly, the center will spearhead collaboration with community partners on health and ethical considerations play in the development of social policies, the center will focus on the ways in which law and ethics impact upon the health of individuals, families, and communities. Through interdisciplinary collaboration among faculty, students, professionals, and practitioners from multi-disciplinary backgrounds, the center will provide a forum for research, education, and community service.

By performing comparative studies of modern metropolitan areas, the Comparative Growth Management Center will identify and articulate solutions to the impact of metropolitan growth upon the environment. Using the Atlanta region as a laboratory for study, the center will develop an international model for the study of problems associated with rapid urban growth and metropolitan sprawl. The center’s international dimension will be enhanced by visiting foreign scholars who will give mini-courses on substantive areas covered by the center.

The Center for Law, Health and Society was created to address contemporary issues arising in areas where law, ethics and health intersect. Recognizing the pivotal role that law and ethical considerations play in the development of social policies, the center will focus on the ways in which law and ethics impact upon the health of individuals, families, and communities. Through interdisciplinary collaboration among faculty, students, professionals, and practitioners from multi-disciplinary backgrounds, the center will provide a forum for research, education, and community service.

Both centers harness existing faculty expertise and interest. They provide wonderful opportunities for interdisciplinary research and community outreach in areas of great importance to the law and the region. I fully expect that the law school will become preeminent in growth management law and health care law as a result of the activities these centers will generate.

New Chair for the Board of Visitors

John T. Marshall, partner at Powell Goldstein Frazer & Murphy, LLP and current member of the college’s Board of Visitors assumed leadership of the board, effective February 3, 2004, from Dom Wyant of Jones Day, who has served as the founding chair for 10 years. Marshall is a long-standing friend of Georgia State and a devoted supporter of the college.

Marshall is a Fellow of the American College of Trial Lawyers, the American Bar Foundation and the Georgia Bar Foundation. He is the Chair of the State Bar of Georgia’s Committee on Standards of the Profession and a Master of the Bleckley and Lumpkin Inns of Court. Marshall has received many awards including the American Bar Association’s Harrison Tweed Award for teaching trial evidence, the State Bar of Georgia’s Tradition of Excellence Award for his service to the bar and the community, the State Bar of Georgia’s A. Gus Cleveland Award for service to continuing legal education and the Atlanta Volunteer Lawyer Foundation’s Phil Heiner Award for legal service to indigents. Recently, he was honored in the Chambers USA Guide as one of America’s leading business lawyers.

Born in Cordele, Georgia, Marshall received his J.D. from Yale University. His practice concentrates in litigation.

Members of the board gathered to celebrate the service of Dom Wyant on May 4.

The Graduate Leadership Council seeks members

The Graduate Leadership Council is currently seeking representatives from the following classes: 1984, 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994, 1995 and 1996. The council acts as an advisory group for the college by assisting with the coordination of a wide range of activities. Each class is represented by two or more graduates who serve on the council for a two-year term. You may nominate someone to serve on the council or nominate yourself. Representatives are expected to attend four meetings each year, staff and enlist the support of classmates for the annual fund program and selected events, bring peer concerns to each meeting for discussion and help organize a class reunion. If you wish to serve, contact Delita Marsland at 404-651-2040 or delita@gsu.edu.
Fellow Grads and Partners Keep Close Ties with the College
Alumni Profiles: Mary M. Brockington and Anne W. Lewis

Mary M. “Peggy” Brockington and Anne W. Lewis are fellow law graduates and partners at Strickland Brockington Lewis, LLP. The firm was formed in 2001 with longtime friend and partner Frank Strickland, after the three of them practiced together for nearly a dozen years. The firm’s practice focuses primarily on education, employment, public utility regulation, legislative and government affairs, redistricting, voting rights and elections, general corporate counseling and litigation.

Peggy received her J.D. from Georgia State in 1986. She represents colleges, schools and universities in matters involving employment law, disability law, faculty misconduct, FERPA, the Clery Act, student discipline, tenure, regulatory compliance, accreditation, federal funding, governance and risk management. A former special education teacher, Peggy is a regular speaker on education-related topics and is vice-chair of the School and College Law Section of the State Bar of Georgia.

Anne received her J.D. in 1989 from Georgia State. She represents the firm’s clients in various public policy and legislative matters, including voting rights cases, redistricting matters, election disputes and public utility issues. Along with Frank, Anne recently represented a group of 29 plaintiffs, both Democrat and Republican voters, who brought a constitutional challenge to the state House and Senate districts. The plaintiffs prevailed and a three-judge federal panel in the Northern District of Georgia redrew the state House and Senate plans to comport with the one person, one vote principle. In addition to redistricting work, Anne represents public officials and candidates in election challenges, election contests and before the State Ethics Commission. She also appears regularly before the Georgia Public Service Commission on behalf of the firm’s telecommunications and energy clients. Since 2002, Anne has served as chief deputy general counsel to the Georgia Republican Party.

Peggy and Anne believe a successful law firm is built upon a number of different strengths and perspectives. Together with Frank, they have been able to capitalize on each of their individual strengths to create a firm they each love coming to every day.

When asked for advice for others seeking a successful private practice, Peggy and Anne responded, “Be passionate about being a lawyer. Don’t try to be an expert in everything. Instead choose something you love and work hard to do it well.”

In concert with their dedication to the firm, Peggy and Anne are loyal supporters and frequent participants at law school activities and special events. Both are members of the Graduate Leadership Council, a graduate advisory group, for which they act as spokespersons for their graduating class and attend student and alumni events to promote the development efforts of the law school.

“Be passionate about being a lawyer. Don’t try to be an expert in everything. Instead choose something you love and work hard to do it well.”

— Peggy Brockington and Anne W. Lewis
The college is now 21 years old and continues to receive national recognition for its academic programs and for the successful graduates it produces. In order to build on this tradition of excellence, the college seeks to increase the number of graduates who contribute financially to the law school. An annual gift to the college enables the dean and the faculty to build a stronger case for support from the Atlanta business and legal community. The financial support from our graduates and their participation in the college’s annual fund program continues to grow. Each year, we seek to build our graduate participation to 20%, which is the national average for public law schools.

Please support the college and join so many of your fellow law graduates who are committed to increasing the reputation of the law school. As of May 24, 2004, 379 graduates or 13% have contributed to the college. We need 564 graduates to contribute at any level, small or large, to meet the goal of 20% before June 30, 2004.

A gift from you to the law school is a personal investment in your legal career. Every gift counts toward participation! With only 30 days left, we hope to hear from you soon!

Graduates Lead Intellectual Property Initiative

An intellectual property (IP) task force was formed approximately one year ago with the mission to develop an executable strategic plan to build the law school’s IP program. The goal is to have Georgia State University become recognized as providing one of the top Intellectual Property Law programs in the United States. The College of Law has a significant number of nationally recognized IP graduates. More than 10% of the members of the Georgia Bar’s IP Section graduated from Georgia State and our law graduates have served as chairs of the IP Section for five years.

During the last year, Professor Michael Landau received approval for two new IP courses and the Career Services Office task force members held the first ever “Practicing IP Law Series” presented by Georgia State IP graduates to current law students. A Georgia State University IP law alumni function is planned for the fall and plans are underway to add a website, mentoring program, externship program, seminars, moot court competitions and more.

On March 24, 2004, the initiative was officially kicked off and the IP Advisory Board was formed. The board members are: Scott M. Frank, board chair and president of the BellSouth Intellectual Property Management and Marketing Corporations; Professor Mark Budnitz; Deborah Butler, vice president of the Intellectual Property Law Society; Alleen Deutsch, development director; Creighton K. Frommer, president of the Intellectual Property Law Society; Dean Janice C. Griffith; Douglas M. Isenberg of counsel, Needle & Rosenberg, P.C.; Associate Dean Steven Kaminshine; Jeffrey R. Kuester, partner at Thomas, Kayden, Horstemeyer & Risley, LLP; Professor Michael B. Landau; W. Scott Petty, partner at King & Spalding LLP; Clifford S. Stanford, senior counsel of the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta and Russell S. Timm, vice president of the Intellectual Property Law Society.

The board is forming committees to assist on all aspects of this initiative. If you have an interest in one or more of the activities mentioned above or something else, please contact Scott Frank at scott.frank@bellsouth.com.

An initiative like this also requires an investment of new resources. Accordingly, the Georgia State IP Law Fund has been established to house private donations designated exclusively for this initiative. To facilitate the growth of the fund, an IP founders program has been established. There is a “Gold Level” for those who donate at least $5,000 over five years and a “Platinum Level” for those who donate at least $10,000 over five years. Donors will be recognized on a plaque in the lobby of the law school, listed in the fall Law Letter, invited to the annual fall Dean’s Club reception and receive other benefits including always being known as a “Georgia State IP Law Founder.” For more information contact Alleen Deutsch at 404/651-2142 or adeutsch@gsu.edu.

Grads Named as Super Lawyers

In addition to the 13 law graduates listed above, Professor Mary Radford was recognized as one of the top 50 female lawyers in Georgia for her expertise in estate planning and trusts. Four current members of our Board of Visitors, Miles J. Alexander, Sharon A. Gay, Elizabeth Tanis and our new board chair, John Marshall, were also recognized.
Black Law Students Association Brunch

On Saturday, April 3, 2004, the Georgia State University chapter of the Black Law Students Association (BLSA) hosted a brunch for approximately 40 guests in honor of former members. The brunch featured speeches by Linda Chastang, the first black law professor and the first BLSA advisor for the college and A.J. Cooper, founder of the national organization of Black American Law Students Association, later named BLSA. “The food was delicious, conversations were inspiring and the speeches were motivating,” said Ikemesit A. Eyo, 2L and BLSA president.

Linda Chastang spoke about the college’s early days and her admiration for Dean Emeritus Ben F. Johnson Jr. who played a major role in the founding of the law school. She recalled how determined Dean Johnson was to create an urban law school in Atlanta. She encouraged current students and graduates present to take advantage of the resources and relationships available to the law school with organizations such as the Georgia Association of Black Women Attorneys and the Gate City Bar Association in Atlanta. She requested that graduates present reach back and aid the students who may need guidance and mentoring upon entering into the legal field. Graduates then had the opportunity to informally provide advice to students present on how to conquer anxiety during the days after graduation and before finding employment.

A.J. Cooper provided a synopsis of why the organization was formed. He reminded everyone present of their responsibility to continue to fight for equality between whites and minorities and especially for those who can not fight for themselves.

BLSA would like to thank the many graduates and members of the law faculty who attended the event and especially Dean Janice C. Griffith for her participation and her continued support of the Black Law Students Association.

College of Law Ranks in Top 100

For the second year in a row, Georgia State University College of Law is the youngest law school to appear in the top 100 law schools published by the U.S. News & World Report. This year, the college ranked 89, up from 91 last year. Dean Griffith extends sincere appreciation to faculty, graduates, students and members of the community who have worked so hard to make the college an outstanding law school.

Technology Update

Smart podiums were installed in each classroom last year. The user-friendly, central control systems are equipped with a podium that enables members of the faculty to connect to the Internet, save text onto whiteboards electronically, control and present Power Point presentations and play video tapes and DVDs all from one podium. It also provides professors with an E-Beam whiteboard system to record what is written on the whiteboard into the computer and then project what is written onto a projection screen. The next phase of technology enhancements will be in the courtroom this fall. The courtroom will be equipped with the same technology used in the federal courts system.

Visit the college’s website at http://law.gsu.edu for more news and updates.

New and Improved Law Alumni Directory

A new searchable alumni directory, projected to be available this fall, is currently under construction. The directory will be funded by the college and administered through the Georgia State University Alumni Association. The college seeks to encourage communication among law graduates for personal, professional and college-related purposes. The directory will be easy to use and include practice areas. Graduates can update their own information directly into the system. Information in the directory will be password protected and can only be accessed by graduates, faculty, students and staff of Georgia State. Online registration will be required for all users. This service will be free for law graduates. More information about the directory will be available in the next issue of the Law Letter.

The college has begun plans for your class reunion scheduled for this fall. Surveys were mailed to graduates last month. Please submit your ideas before June 21, 2004 via email to lawdevelopment@gsu.edu. We are currently seeking graduates to serve on the planning committee. If interested, contact Delita Marsland at 404-651-2040.

Attention Law Graduates!

Have you moved? Are you running for office? Have you obtained a new job, position or received an award or special recognition? Please help us update our records. Send your personal and professional news to lawdevelopment@gsu.edu.

Grades Needed

The Admissions Office is seeking volunteers to help with the college’s recruitment efforts. Call 404-651-4162 to find out how you can help.
Ronald Blasi hosted Mr. Kyoto Matsuyama, the deputy director of the Planning Division at the Japanese National Tax Agency, during Mr. Matsuyama’s visit to the United States which was coordinated by the Georgia Council for International Visitors. Professor Blasi also made a presentation on significant tax issues at the American Bankers Association Community Bankers Council meeting in Savannah.

Mark Budnitz submitted a manuscript for the 2004 supplement to his book, Consumer Banking and Payments Law. His first 2004 supplement to The Law of Lender Liability was published. He submitted comments to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System regarding their proposed rule implementing the Check 21 Act and taught a seminar to credit unions on the issues they face complying with the Act. He also taught a seminar to state attorney generals across the country on preauthorized demand drafts and presented to fundraisers and staff of the Atlanta Legal Aid Society on the history of legal services under the Office of Economic Opportunity.

Clark D. Cunningham chaired the selection committee for the Inaugural Award for Innovation and Excellence in Teaching Professionalism, co-sponsored by the ABA Standing Committee on Professionalism and the Conference of Chief Justices. Selection of the award winners was the culminating event of the first W. Lee Burge Conference on professional excellence, organized by Cunningham and held at Georgia State on January 30. He was the keynote speaker at the annual roundtable of the ABA Standing Committee on Specialization, March 26, in New Orleans. He chaired one program and spoke at another program, both on criminal justice, at the 2004 Meeting of the Law & Society Association on May 28 in Chicago. He also spoke on “Confidentiality and Clients” at the ABA National Conference on Professional Responsibility on June 4 in Naples, Florida.
