Disability Services

This LibGuide contains resources and information to assist the post-secondary student, their parents, and legal practitioners with research on disability services in post-secondary education. Disability services must be provided to qualifying students at institutions of higher learning receiving federal and/or state funding under the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) and Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973. An institution may not discriminate against a student with a disability, and "otherwise qualified" students may not be excluded from programs or services. A student may qualify for services and accommodations for various reasons, including, but not limited to, learning disabilities, ADD/ADHD, hearing or visual impairments, and physical impairments. Students may also qualify for services on a temporary basis under certain circumstances.

It is important to remember that the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) only applies to students in preschool through twelfth grade until the student reaches the age of 21. IDEA does not apply to post-secondary settings, and the requirements for accommodations of post-secondary institutions are much different than for elementary and secondary students. If you believe you are in need of services or qualify for an accommodation, you may be required to provide documentation to the institution at your own expense. Most institutions require reasonable notice for accommodations and many have established disability services offices to assist students, staff, and employees with disabilities.
