EFFECTIVE DATE: July 1, 1992

History

Although Georgia already had some of the strictest drug laws in the country,1 twenty-nine drug bills2 were proposed during the 1992 legislative session. The bills were proposed at the request of constituents\(^3\) who were afraid of the impact that the prevalence of drugs may have on their children.\(^4\) However, legislators who sponsored the drug bills which were passed acknowledged that the laws will probably have little effect on the current drug problem.\(^5\)

The clamor by constituents seeking tougher drug laws resulted in the proposal of legislation that did little more than reiterate existing laws.\(^6\) Protecting children from drugs is of great public concern.\(^7\) Education may be the best weapon against the drug problem,\(^8\) but as long as public fear continues legislators will continue to propose reactive, rather than remedial, bills.\(^9\)

The Act makes it a crime to distribute or manufacture marijuana or any controlled substance within 1000 feet of public housing or any government property which has been set aside for use as a park or recreational facility.\(^10\) One of the bill’s sponsors was urged by her constituents to propose legislation that would help protect children from exposure to drugs.\(^11\) As proposed, the bill increased the mandatory penalty for persons found possessing, selling, distributing, or manufacturing drugs within 1000 feet of any municipal recreational area playground or park.\textsuperscript{12}

SB 592, which was introduced at the request of the Governor, was similar to HB 1779 in that it also proposed an increased penalty for those found to have conducted any illegal drug activity within 1000 feet of public recreational areas.\textsuperscript{13} However, SB 592 provided that illegal drug activity in or near public housing should likewise be more severely penalized.\textsuperscript{14} There was some debate about the public housing provision. It was said that this provision unfairly penalized individuals in low-income housing.\textsuperscript{15} One senator claimed the added language would lead to the selective enforcement of drug laws.\textsuperscript{16} Nonetheless, SB 592 moved swiftly through the Senate. In response to the allegations that the bill was targeted at minorities, one of the sponsors of HB 1779 agreed to add the proposed public housing language to HB 1779.\textsuperscript{17} The addition of the public housing language did not slow the passage of HB 1779. It passed the House and the Senate with little subsequent debate and SB 592 was dropped.\textsuperscript{18}

Last year the General Assembly passed similar legislation increasing the penalty for "manufacturing, distributing, dispensing, or possessing controlled substances in, on, or near public or private schools."\textsuperscript{19} The penalty imposed by HB 1779 for illegal activity in or near public parks or housing is consistent with last year's legislation. An offender may receive up to twenty years in prison or a $20,000 fine or both for a first offense,\textsuperscript{20} and may receive up to forty years imprisonment or a $400,000 fine or both for second or subsequent offenses\textsuperscript{21} in or around schools,\textsuperscript{22} public housing, playgrounds, and parks.\textsuperscript{23} residence at any time during the commission of the offense, and that the prohibited conduct was not carried on for purposes of financial gain. The Act also provides for municipalities or counties to place signs designating these areas as drug-free zones at their discretion. Many other states have similar legislation, and the drug-free areas in these states are marked with signs that explain the additional penalty incurred when the law is violated.

The Act amends the drug trafficking provision of the Georgia Code to include methamphetamine. As introduced, SB 834 outlined penalties for persons who knowingly sell, manufacture, deliver, or bring into the state five or more grams of methamphetamine. The bill was sent to the House Special Judiciary Committee where language was substituted to match other trafficking laws in Georgia which require twenty-eight grams, not five, of controlled substances like cocaine. This change was requested by the Attorney General’s Office.

Methamphetamine is an illegal drug that has recently been increasing in use and availability. It is known as “crank” or “speed” and is made from pharmaceuticals that can be purchased legally. At a meeting between the Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy, also known as the “Federal Drug Czar,” and Clayton County drug enforcement officials, it was realized that Georgia criminalized the possession of, but not trafficking in, methamphetamine.

The bill, as introduced, made selling, manufacturing, or delivering five or more grams of methamphetamine a felony. This would have made selling methamphetamine a more severe crime than selling cocaine or cocaine derivatives. The House Special Judiciary Committee's substituted language brought the bill into conformance with current drug laws. The substituted language was adopted and passed. It provides a penalty for anyone who "sells, manufactures, delivers, or brings into this state or has possession of 28 grams or more" instead of five grams as was originally proposed. This brings the legislation in line with the standard for trafficking in other illegal drugs having a comparable street value.

The Act makes it a crime to hire, solicit, engage, or use a minor in illegal drug activity. The bill was introduced at the request of the Governor's Office, and met with little opposition. The Special Judiciary Committee offered an amendment that expanded the scope of the proposed bill. In its original form, the bill only reached adults who used minors when the minors were found with a sufficient quantity of a controlled substance to "indicate an intent to distribute controlled substances or marijuana." The amendment removed this limiting language, allowing the courts to determine the evidentiary standard necessary to prove intent.

The Act closed a loophole which drug traffickers have been utilizing for years: the use of children for distribution. Without this legislation... adults could escape conviction and elude law enforcement officers by using children as distributors.\textsuperscript{46} Another bill, HB 87, was introduced in an attempt to address the use of children by adult drug dealers.\textsuperscript{47} However, it penalized the children without reaching the adult drug offenders.\textsuperscript{48} HB 87 would have penalized juveniles thirteen years of age or older\textsuperscript{49} for acts which, if committed by an adult, would be designated as felonies for trafficking in illegal drugs.\textsuperscript{50} HB 87 also provided special provisions for juveniles who had been found trafficking on three or more occasions.\textsuperscript{51} This bill passed the House but not the Senate.\textsuperscript{52}

The Act penalizes those who use minors of any age for drug trafficking.\textsuperscript{53} There are many cases of children who are as young as eight years old delivering drugs on their bicycles.\textsuperscript{54} HB 87 aimed to make the use of minors less attractive by treating them more like adult offenders.\textsuperscript{55} In contrast, SB 593 penalizes the adults who use the minors for unlawful purposes.\textsuperscript{56}

\textit{HB 601}

Three new drug testing bills were proposed this session, although only one, HB 601, passed.\textsuperscript{57} HB 601 was held over from the previous legislative session.\textsuperscript{58} The Act increases the amount of money which candidates for state elected positions may be reimbursed for their drug test which is required pursuant to section 21-2-140.\textsuperscript{59} This legislation, mandating drug testing of candidates, was enacted in 1990.\textsuperscript{60} One of the sponsor's of the original 1990 legislation and this bill proposed the legislation out of a sense of fairness rather than any genuine fear that state politicians were not drug free.\textsuperscript{61} The sponsor of the 1990 legislation felt that if city council or state politicians require drug testing of state employees, they too should undergo drug testing.\textsuperscript{62} Additionally, if in order to appease public concern about the use of illegal drugs politicians must infringe upon the rights of government employees, the politicians themselves should be treated similarly.\textsuperscript{63}

This Act makes technical changes of little significance to Code section 21-2-140.\textsuperscript{64} Primarily, the amendment softens the financial burden on politicians for their required drug tests by allowing reimbursement up to $50 upon submission of "a valid pauper's affidavit."\textsuperscript{65} Additionally, the quality control of the laboratories qualified to administer drug testing is now left to the discretion of the commissioner of human resources.\textsuperscript{66} Previously, it was statutorily fixed to require that qualifying labs add "one to three blind test samples per shift."\textsuperscript{67}
